ANNUAL SWIMMING MEET

A swimming meet will be held at 2:00 P.M. Saturday, August 17, at the Mattapoisett Public Beach. In the event of rain, the meet will be held on the following day at the same time. Only Mattapoisett residents will be eligible. Registrations are being taken at the bathhouse.

The events for girls will be a 25-yard race for those 11 and under; a 50-yard race for those 14 and under; and a 100-yard race for those 15 and over. Events for boys will be similar. There will be an open diving contest and an open handicap 1-mile race. Milers must have consent of parents. A volleyball tournament will follow the swim meet.

Trophies and swimming certificates will be awarded at the close of the program.

EXHIBIT AT ART CENTER

Opening night Tuesday at the Marion Art Center was a gala affair, launching the last and biggest art show of this summer's season. A most important artist is exhibiting her paintings-Mrs. Leo W. Mortenson, known as Virginia Mortenson, from Concord, Mass. Her one-man shows last year were in Amherst and Cambridge, Huntington, New York and Smith College this past June. She has exhibited in many group shows including Addison Gallery, Andover, Mass. She is the receipent of numerous prizes especially in a medium which she has

150 Years Ago--1813

Mattapoisett in the years of the War of 1812 was still "ye Lower New Town" of the Revolution--a distinct community lying on the cart-path between Hammondtown by the Herring Weir and Dextertown on the Pine Island Road--but it had grown tremendously. Twenty-five years had elapsed since the establishment of the Federal Government and the adoption of the Constitution in 1788. In those years the little village clustered along the waterfront had increased from six or eight houses to 40 houses, four wharves, a ropewalk, and half a dozen active shipyards that had launched in the neighborhood of 100 vessels.

A few houses had gone up on what is now upper Main Street, among them the large square house at the corner of Route 6 which had been built by Alpheus Barrows, the so-called Curtis House across from the foot of Hammond Street, the small house at the foot of Depot Street, and Deacon Tobey's homestead on the lot where Mrs. Virginia Mahoney lives.

On the land in the vicinity of the Legion Hall stood a salt works slanting down to the marsh. Before the railroad embankment was built years later, the salt water flowed up into Barlow's Eel Pond unimpeded, and the marsh covered a much greater area than now. The Town Hall corner was at this time a marshy inlet, mostly under water at high tide, and on the then-shore of this inlet--where the Historical Museum stands and thereabouts--was another salt works sloping down to the marsh. (Both of these salt works were demolished in the Hurricane of 1815.)

To skirt this marshy inlet, the main street swung eastward just below the present Depot Street and slanted back of Deacon Tobey's house to approximately the foot of Baptist Street, and so along the present Church Street over to Pearl and down to the waterfront.

The main body of the village commenced on lower Main Street with the house now owned by Mrs. George Hiller. This building was built for a tavern and was for years occupied by Solomon Leach and family. Mr. Leach was one of those human beings for whom fate holds a succession of personal calamities. He outlived not only his wife but all his children. As in so many families of those days, two of his sons were lost seafaring--one in the wreck of the Brig Annawan and the other by drowning off a vessel in New Orleans.

The next three houses down the street were built by the three Rogers brothers from Chilmark on the Vineyard. The first (present Oliver house) was built by Abisha Rogers, a ship carpenter and the grandfather of Henry Rogers who became the millionaire first president of the Standard Oil and who gave the Town the Center School (and Fairhaven the high school and the Unitarian Church).

The second house (Suzans) was that of Libni Rogers. In 1814 Libni built the Sloop Peeler, 44 tons, in his front yard and launched it in the creek across the marsh. The third house was Capt. Mooers Rogers', a shipmaster in the European trade commanding, among others, the Ship Xenophon, 383 tons, built in the William

The Monroe house at the foot of Pearl Street was built in 1809 by Elijah Willis, Esq. In fact, for a while Pearl Street was called Willis Street, but the squire made some enemies so the street was officially named Pearl. Squire Willis was a shipowner and ship agent, sending his vessels up and down the coast from Maine to New Orleans and the West Indies and acting as agent for the whaling brigs Orion and LaGrange. The lovely old house has seen a great deal of Mattapoisett's maritime history from the British attacks in 1814 and the ships smashing into its foundations in the Hurricane of 1815 down to the boats again crashing into it in 1938 and 1954.

Squire Willis got the better of many people in business dealings, but on one occasion, years after 1813, his sense of self-importance made him outsmart himself in good shape. At the time of this story, his neighbor to the north on Main Street was John Clark (father of the late Mrs. Ellis Mendell), and both John and the Squire kept chickens. The Squire kept his pretty well fenced in, while John let his roam about his yard.

Several days in a row the Squire found one of John's hens in his garden, and each time he threw the squawking fowl over the fence into John's yard. Finally he got on his high horse and informed John emphatically that from that time on, whenever he found one of John's hens in his garden, he would kill it and throw it back over the fence.

A day or two later there was another hen scratching in his garden so the Squire, true to his word, shot the hen and threw it into John's yard. When John came home from work, he picked it up and prepared to dress it for supper the next day. But it didn't look like one of his hens. Sure enough, when he shut up his hen house that night, he counted his fowl and they were all there.

As the story has it, Squire Willis shot several more of his own hens and threw them into the Clarks' yard before he caught on. The story does not say whether the Clarks got tired of eating chicken. (To be Continued)

Smith busy. The Search and Rescue Center in the Second District Headquarters handles all rescue cases in the St. Louis area as well as coordinating the cases throughout the District.

The Second Coast Guard District covers all or part of 21 states, including over 5,100 miles of navigable waterways. The area extends from West Virginia to Wyoming and from lower Minnesota to upper Mississippi.

Alan, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Smith of North Street, Mattapoisett, was born in Brockton and raised in Middleboro where he graduated from Middleboro High School. After graduating from Dartmouth College he joined the Coast Guard and was commissioned an Ensign in the U. S. Coast Guard after completing Officer Candidate School at New London, Conn. His duty assignments have taken him from the Coast Guard Cutter CASCO, operating out of Boston, to the Cutter CITRUS where he served as operations officer.

Lt. Smith, his wife, the former Joan Wilkie of Lakeville, Mass., and their son Douglas

Dear friends,
We think the custom of expressing sympathy by sending flowers is a beautiful one. There is comfort in these floral expressions.
Those who say "I prefer to give my flowers to the living rather than the dead" should remember that flowers at a funeral ARE for the living. Flowers may also convey a tribute to the deceased, but this again is for the comfort of the family.
Respectfully,
Carl C Cornwell

AUCTION PLANNED IN MARION

Cane Club of Marion is planning an auction to be held on Monday evening, August 19th, at Barden's Boat Yard in Marion at 7 P.M. Any residents wishing to donate articles are requested to call the following numbers in Marion: Richard Hopkins, Jr., 621 W; Robert Wing, 741; William Coulson, 3rd, 101; Harold Nye, 600.

The auctioneer will be Richard A. Bourne.

HERITAGE TRAIL

New England's nation-wide tourist promotion, the Heritage Trail, may boomerang and do the area more harm than good unless the states erect directional signs along the Trail, said an official of the Berkshire Hills Conference.

Angus MacDonald, vice-president of the Conference, said that many tourists have expressed resentment at coming to New England to follow Heritage Trail and finding no directional signs or markings on any highways.
